What is its source?

Along with water-soluble (C, B1, B2, B3, B5, B6, B7, B9, B12) and fat-soluble (A, D, E) vitamins, chicory is a rich source of ingredients such as inulin, I-carnitine tartrate, taurine and quercetin. It has structure. Among these nutritional values is zinc. There are also many minerals such as boron, molybdenum, selenium and iodine.

All these vitamins, minerals and additional ingredients are important in various metabolic processes required in many areas such as strong immunity, fertility, energetic life, skin regeneration, hair pigmentation. If any of these components is missing, the body may send a hunger signal to replace the missing component.

In addition, this structure, which contains high amounts of inulin, undergoes fermentation in the intestines thanks to inulin, which is a prebiotic. Inulin fermentation regulates the intestinal flora by increasing the number of beneficial bacteria and decreasing the number of harmful bacteria.
